This diploma thesis concerns legal regulation of hunting associations and their activities in the Czech Republic. The thesis is divided into four parts, which may be further divided into individual chapters and subchapters. The first part of the diploma thesis outlines the development of hunting, development of hunting associations and their legal regulation. The following part of the diploma thesis, which is at the same time its building stone, analyses the individual aspects of the legal regulation of the hunting associations and their activities, namely the general legal regulation, represented primarily by the Civil Code, and a special one represented especially by the Hunting Act. The third part of the diploma thesis gives a look at some concrete controversial cases, which the author encountered in practice. The last part of the diploma thesis brings several proposals de lege ferenda. The aim of the diploma thesis is to analyse in detail the current legal regulation of the hunting associations and their activities, and to answer the question of which rules governing the hunting associations and hunting activities on the territory of the Czech Republic apply.
